In 1979, ESPN selected Bristol, Connecticut, as the site of its sports-focused broadcast company. Having begun in just one modest building, the company's Bristol-based headquarters today spans 16 acres and includes 17 buildings totaling of 900,000 square feet. The main campus is referred to as ESPN Plaza.

In addition to ESPN Plaza, the sports network leases a 400,000 square-foot warehouse facility nearby. Kohler Ronan was engaged at this property to provide full MEP/FP services in support of a new north campus dining facility and subsequent office fit-out.

The dining component of the project encompassed designs for a fully-equipped institutional kitchen, servery, and casual dining room/cafeteria. These spaces totaled approximately 30,000 square feet, leaving 37,000 for the office fit-out.

Regarding the office fit-out, Kohler Ronan designed engineering systems for conference rooms, offices, lounges, and the like. The facility's exterior includes a converted courtyard, open to employees.
